Earthquake Ravages Armenia

Tens of thousands killed and hundreds of thousands homeless

By Barlow Der Mugrdechian

A devastating earthquake ravaged much of north-western Armenia at mid-day on Wednesday, December 7 killing an estimated 80-100,000 people. According to early reports, the town of Spitak, population 16,000, was completely wiped out and 50% of the city of Kirovakan was also destroyed. Reports from Leninakan, the second largest city in Armenia with a population of 290,000, indicated that there were no standing structures of more than two stories and that more than 75% of the city had been demolished. The estimated dead represent 3% of the population of Soviet Armenia. There are over 7,000,000 Armenians in the world.

The earthquake registered a 6.9 on the Richter scale marking it as a quake packed with great destructive power. Armenia is located in an earthquake zone and throughout history has been subject to the periodic destruction of cities and towns. Such ancient major centers as Ani, Dvin, and Van to name a few have been shaken by the tremblers, but none have combined the destructive power of the recent quake the generally poor current construction practices in Armenia.

Hundreds of thousands have been left homeless as a result of the earthquake and relief efforts have been centered on providing much needed medicine to the injured. Food is also being shipped in and shelters are being set up in outlying areas.

Compounding the problems associated with the after-effects of the earthquake is the fact that tens of thousands of Armenians had already been pouring into Armenia over the past several weeks as a result of Azerbaijani persecution related to Armenian efforts to reunify the disputed region of Karabagh to Armenia. These refugees fleeing from Azerbaijan where anti-Armenian pogroms have claimed over several hundred lives this year alone. Armenians are fleeing from Baku, the capital of Azerbaijan as well as from Armenian Assembly of America, the already limited social services budget Armenian National Committee, the Arthreaten to turn these events into an even menian Relief Society, and the Armenian greater tragedy.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has accepted offers of aid from Europe and the United States. Planeloads of equipment and supplies are pouring into Yerevan from throughout the world. A team of French doctors has also arrived to aid the survivors. Winter weather combined with the mountainous terrain have made recovery efforts difficult in this remote north-western portion of Armenia. Telephone and electricity lines are down making accurate estimates of dead and injured almost impossible for the moment.

Kalfayans Pledge $50,000 Toward Armenian Chair

Anonymous Donors Match All Contributions in a Naming Pledge

Hye Sharzhoom Staff

Mr. and Mrs. Sarkis and Meline Kalfayan of Fresno pledged $50,000 toward an Endowed Chair in Armenian Studies at CSUF in an emotionally charged banquet on November 22, 1988 held in the gallery of the Valley Business Center on campus. The generosity of the Kalfayans was matched by their modesty during the evening's events.

After making the announcement and introducing the Kalfayans, Dr. Dikran Kouymjian, Director of the Armenians Studies Program and last speaker of the evening, said that a Fresno couple, which wished to remain anonymous for the time being, had made a naming pledge for the Chair by which every dollar raised would be matched by them up to one half of the minimum $300,000 needed to endow a Chair at CSUF.

Inspired by this news, by the major Kalfayan pledge, and by contributions from several Armenian organizations--the Armenian Relief Society, the Armenian National Committee, the Knights of Vartan, and the Armenian American Citizens' League--other community members made spontaneous donations, led by Stephen and Lucille Pilibos, whose sudden $10,000 pledge brought further applause. Fresno State's own President Harold Haak and his wife Betty, both visably moved by the dramatic response of the community toward an academic program, gave $1,000. This unprecedented donation by a University President to an Armenian Chair was warmly cheered by those at the and inspired pledges banquet, by Professor Vincent Petrucci of the Viticulture Program and a number of Armenians.

Dr. Kouymjian suggested that the audience end the memorable evening by enjoying the entertainment of the Arax Armenian Dancers. He promised to call everyone at the banquet beginning the next Monday morning for their pledges so that with the anonymous matching donation fund drive for the Chair could be quickly completed, perhaps before the end of the year.

Sarkis Kalfayan has been in California since 1926, when he moved to Yettem, Ca. with his mother and father, Barsam and Aghavni. The Barsam family immediately became involved in the enhancement of the church in Yettem.

Sarkis married Miss Meline Babessian in 1949 following his service in the United States Army in World War II where he served as an interpreter for General Patton. Meline Babessian is the daughter of Hovanness Babessian, teacher and author of several Armenian books.

Recipient of graduate degrees from Fresno State, UC Berkeley, and USC Sarkis was employed for much of his life as a city planner in Southern California.

Many faculty friends of the ASP were also at the banquet and gave their thoughts about the ASP. Dr. Richard Pinkerton, Director of the Valley Business Center was the keynote speaker.

Maurice Gendron, Chairman of the Department of Foreign Languages, the new home of the ASP, said,"...I am very glad that Armenian Studies is back in our department. I think that this where Latest reports from Armenia indicate Armenia, leaving the Armenians in Azerbaijan to the hand of the Turks. Reports have already been received concerning the burning of homes and additional murders of Armenians by the Azeri Turks, even after news of the earthquake had spread through the Soviet Union. In addition, some 25,000 orphaned Armenian children have been reported being prepared to move to Moscow. This would have tragic consequences as these Armenians would grow up without an Armenian education and be assimilated completely into Russian culture. Does this mean that Armenians are being suffering as a result of the earthquake?

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

This in repy to some of the people whose writings appeared in your issue of May 1988.

Prof. Justin McCarthy: This man's In the Armenian Journey documentary, he ridiculed the cables (eye-witness acounts of American reporters, diplomats, missionaries, doctors, etc.) printed in the New York Times during the Genocide untrue. He also ridiculed the proceedings of the 1919 Turkish Military Tribunal that tried Turkish officials who had participated in the Genocide. He claimed that the Military Tribunal was imposed on the Turks by the Allies who had occupied Turkey. Anyone reading the court records will see that the Court was established by the order of the Sultan and the opinions expressed were strongly anti-Ittihad.

Professors Bilderback and David N. Jones should have checked other sources before trusting McCarthy's words in his book Muslims and Minorities . If the Turkish archives are closed, where does he get his numbers of the population in Turkey prior to 1923 from? I do not believe he has knowlege of the old Arabic script needed to be able to read some of the old demographic books. In other words, he has been given pre-arranged numbers to peddle around.

For centuries, even today, the Armenian Patriarch of Turkey has had fairly accurate figures on Armenians living in every village and city. Therefore, there is no reason for the professors to doubt the population records made available by the Armenians.

The was no Muslim/Christian civil war inducted in labor battalions and massacred. Deportations followed. In about eight cities, Armenians who refused deportation orders were killed. Self defense is not uprising. The figure of 300,000 might be correct for the Greeks, but the Greeks suffered because they invaded Turkey and were defeated in Smyrna in 1922. Out of a population of two million, 1.5 million Armenians were deported and massacred. There are 24,000 documents in the US National Archives, dated from 1910-1929, detailing the extermination of Armenians in Turkey (Congressional Record-House, August 7, 1987, H7317).

If 2.5 million Turks died during the 1914-1922 period, Armenians could not have killed them because they were not there. How could women, elderly men, and children kill? And with what? I was there. I'm one of the survivors.

Professor Jones asks where the Turks of Eastern Anatolia went? All of them ran away before the Russian invasion and defeat of Turkey. Many Turks preferred to remain in the homes of the deported Armenians.

Does it occur to these professors that Turkey los millions of soldiers to war, disease, and famine? This is much more plausible than blaming the Armenian victims of the Genocide.

Sincerely,

Nishan Nercessian Westminster, CA

l'errible Seconds

By Linda A. Abrahamian Editor

The Armenian town of Spitak ceased to exist at 11:41 Wednesday morning, it's life snuffed out by an enormous earthquake.

A tenth grader saw a hand sticking out of the rubble. He recognized the ring on the hand and started digging.

"Mama, give me your hand!"

He saved his mother. But others in his family were dead.

"There are no lights in the houses. Even on a dark night during the war it is never so dark as this. We were ready to see the worst, but what we really saw made us realize that our imaginations were inadequate."

"The atmosphere there is like a funeral. Armenian television and radio play mournful classical music for hours and hours. When the music stops, the terrible pictures begin again. It breaks your heart."

This is Armenia.

It happened on a Wednesday morning. A Wednesday morning that seemed just like any other Wednesday morning: people working in the factories...women cooking the mid-day meals...children studying their lessons. There was no warning, no time to take shelter. The earth shook and split open, swallowing everything in its path. Destruction has no prejudice. In a matter one of the leading seconds. industrialized republics in the Soviet Union was reduced to rubble. Destroyed. Factories and homes crumbled...Children buried alive in schoolhouses.

In a matter of seconds. leading the one of industrialized republics in the Soviet Union was reduced to rubble.

Nearly 100,000 Armenians are dead, thousands more may still be trapped beneath the rubble, and over 400,000 are injured and homeless.

Armenians are not immune to devastation...But the destruction they know has not been cast down by the hand of nature, but by man. In this century alone, they have witnessed and survived a Genocide. The world closed their eyes, and plugged their ears to the cries of Armenians pleading for help in WWI. As a result, over one million Armenians were exterminated by the Ottoman Empire. Today, however, the world is not closing its eyes.

As a result, over one Armenians million were exterminated the Ottoman Empire.

Over twelve thousand Russian troops are in Armenia now. They are completely involved in rescue work. For hours on end, Soviet soldiers, Armenian survivors, and expert rescue teams from the West are digging through the debris, hoping to save those who are trapped in the rubble. They hear screams, cries for help, and they dig faster. The cries begin to fade after hours of digging...Survival for those trapped is grim...But they still dig. It seems hopeless. It may in fact be hopeless for those buried alive.

Hope is then for those who survived. Over 400,000 residents of Armenia are now homeless...Homeless in the dead of winter. They live in the streets, among the ruins, in make-shift tents. Most of their personal belongings are unsalvageable. They're cold and in need of warm clothing. Food and water are scarce. The starving Armenians are starving again. Many of the injured are dying...dying because they lack medical attention and supplies.

The starving Armenians are starving again.

The Soviet Union has turned to the West for help. Agencies in the US, France, and England are sending medical supplies, doctors, food, money, clothing, everything and anything that is needed to the region. The entire world, not only Armenians in the Diaspora, seems to be concerned with aiding the victims of the earthquake. Well, nearly the entire world...

The Azerbaijanis are using the chaos caused by the destruction to their advantage. Up until the earthquake, Soviet troops have been present in Azerbaijan to police the conflicts between Armenians and Turks in the region of Karabagh.

The Azerbaijanis are using the chaos caused the destruction their advantage.

Those troops, however, have been transferred to Armenia to aid in the rescue efforts. The Azerbaijani Turks, then, have again waged their campaign of terror against the unprotected Armenians in the region. Shortly after the troops were transferred, at least six Armenian homes were burned and looted. It seems that the Armenians in the Soviet Union have fallen victim twice in one week: first to destruction caused by nature, and secondly to destruction caused by human prejudice.

This, then, is Armenia today. The small nation that had to rebuild itself after a Genocide must now rebuild itself again. The people, however, will not lose hope. Armenians are a race of survivors...They are not afraid to ask for help...They now must ask for help...And help is what we must give them.

Mass Movements in Armenia Foretell Change

By Barlow Der Mugrdechian Advisor

The political rumblings emanating from Armenia represent the awakening of a giant- a unified Armenian people. When I was in Armenia in June of this year the nascent political movement had only just begun to coalesce and become embodied into the Karabagh Committee. The now Committe has taken overall leadership of the people's movement, which has been the most significant in the history of the Soviet Union. Hundreds of thousands of Armenians have been gathering at weekly meetings which have taken place in the Opera square or more recently in front of the Madenataran (Manuscript Library). Their demands have centered on the reunification of Karabagh to Armenia- a call echoing the demands of Karabagh Armenians themselves. But the movement has spread far beyond this issue to encompass such questions as the quality of life, pollution, and the endemic corruption in Armenia.

Strikes have been the most effective tool for the masses to express their outrage at the recent negative decisions taken by the Supreme Soviet in Moscow regarding the reunification of Karabagh. Armenians are still outraged at the lack of quick action to determine the culprits responsible for the wide ranging pogroms against Armenians in Azerbaijan. It is only recently that one of three Azeri defendants was convicted of inciting a crowd to riot and was sentenced to death. The prosecution case has taken many months since the actual crimes took place late in February of 1988.

Armenians are wondering why Azerbaijani police and officials watched as hundreds more Armenians were killed or injured in Kirovabad in a violent response to the conviction of Ahmed I. Ahmedov in Moscow.

The events of the past nine months have been stark evidence as to the failure of the policies of perestroika especially glasnost in the question of nationalities. For the Armenian people the lesson has been one learned at the cost of bloodshed- a result of the obedience of the Armenians to peaceful means as contrasted to the bloody policies of the Azerbaijani officials and crowds.

What started in February of 1988 as a protest against the continued oppression of the Armenian majority in Karabagh by the Azerbaijani government has now become a movement for the transformation of Armenian national consciousness. movement, broadly based and without the support of official Armenia, has become the embodiment of participatory democracy. In perhaps the most striking example of this, on October 9 of this year, two write-in candidates, Khatchik Stambooltsyan and Ashot Manoocharian, a member of the Karabagh Committee, defeated established incumbents in races for the post of Deputy to the Armenian Supreme Soviet in Yerevan. Neither of the two are members of the Communist party and are the first independent candidates to sit in the Armenian Supreme Soviet.

Moscow has recently attempted to subvert the authority of the Karabagh Committee, which has the allegiance of a majority of the people, through the formation of competing bodies whose membership is composed largely of now discredited writers and intellectuals. But the attempts to suffocate the still burgeoning movement have so far been in vain and the anti-central government feeling has continued to grow. In the face of thousands of Soviet troops which have recently poured in to Yerevan, and the curfew which is in effect in the city, mass meetings have continued to take place on Friday evenings.

Proposed economic reforms for Karabagh have not been accepted at face value from a populace used to decades of discrimination and oppression. The Azerbaijani plan is to eliminate the Armenian population from Karabagh in the same in which they have succeeded Nakhitchevan, a formerly Armenian populated region which borders on Armenia but which is governed by Azerbaijan. Nakhitchevan is an ancient center of Armenian life with thousands of monuments such as churches and stonecrosses which attest to the rich cultural life which Armenians once enjoyed there.

Some have questioned the political acumen of the Karabagh Committee for calling on the people to strike and to continue to meet in defiance of authorities calls for "calm." But in response to this one would have to say that the proper moment had been reached where hundreds of thousands of people could be mobilized not for simply one day but for monthsindicating the total support of the people and their willingness to sacrifice to achieve their goals.

The argument put forth in Pravda and parroted by the U.S. press has been that Armenian demands and actions have undermined the policies of M. Gorbachev at a time when there seems to be real ganda of certain issues are in fact the very from the outset. The Armenian people of Azerbaijan. have been in the forefront of the changes and have wholeheartedly endorsed them, easily and completely, this has left them directed at those policies. It is paradoxical that Gorbachev himself has participated in citizens. these criticisms and there is disauthorities should apply these new policies towards the questions of nationalities and right the historic wrong committed by Stalin, namely the arbitrary assignment of Karabagh to Azerbaijan and suffering caused by that move.

feud between Muslim Azerbaijanis and energy, jobs, and housing. Christian Armenians. This simplistic approach neglects the political factors in which Stalin played the major role.

The idea of a feud also diminishes the question of responsibility in the face of deaths which have occurred over the last several months. Often it seems that Christian and Muslims are attacking each other and that equal numbers are dying, so responsibility can be equally apportioned between the two sides, after would the Turks have killed Armenians for no reason? What is not made clear is that it is the Armenians who are being massacred in large numbers in these pogroms in areas where they consitute a minority. Such was the case in Sumgait in February and in Kirovabad in November. Both of these cities are in Azerbaijan, both are inhabited by Armenian minorities, and in both areas the progress on such issues as human rights massacres were carried out over a period of within the Soviet Union and a reduction in days in a detailed and premeditated fashion. the arms race with the Unitesd States is a Azerbaijani police and authorities did real possibility. Students Return from Armenia

Hye Sharzhoom Staff

The California State University, Fresno Armenian Studies Program, in conjunction with the Committee for Cultural Relations for Armenians Abroad (the Yerevan based organization sponsors students, scientists, and other guest every year to Armenia-the Armenian acronym for the Committee is SPIURK) sponsored a trip to Yerevan last summer. Eight students, under the direction of Barlow Der Mugrdechian of the ASP, travelled in Armenia for twenty-five days. The SPIURK provided housing, meals, and transportation, as well as organizing lecturers for the students. The trip emphasized Armenian culture, history, and language...but more than that, an important precedent was set which should lay the groundwork for expanded programs in

The students were invited to participate in archaeological work at the ancient Armenian capital of Dvin, working to clean the area where the former mother church of the Catholicos was located. This was the first time students have been allowed to participate in this kind of work in Armenia. Plans for next year will include an expanded schedule of work on the land and provide the impetus eventually for hundreds of Diasporan youth throughout the world to return to Armenia in the summers for an unforgettable experience.

These young people would then return to their homes and communities with a renewed committment to becoming active leaders in the Armenian community. Furthermore, the structure of Diasporan communities would be strenghthened and the constant exchange with Armenia would give Armenians in the Diaspora a better picture of their fellow Armenians.

In return, reciprocal agreements would be arranged whereby students from Armenia would visit the Diaspora and thus expand and enrich the exchange program further.

Jacqueline Sislian was one of the students who travelled to Armenia. She is a Liberal Studies major at CSUF, minoring in Armenian Studies. Jacqueline has been actively involved in the ASO and is presently serving as President of the organization. Jacqueline was interviewed by Hye Sharzhoom about her experiences in Yerevan.

What is your most vivid memory of

The people in Armenia have given me my most vivid memories. They treated us with love, generosity, and respect. They seem to treat everyone that way, even their neighbors. There is no jealousy in Armenia.

How did participating in the demonstrations for the reunification of KArabagh make you feel?

Participating in the demonstrations made me feel like I was doing something for the fatherland. I wasn't really doing anything special, but just being there to experience it, and show my interest was a great feeling and a chance of a lifetime.

How were you treated as an American/Armenian? And how Armenians view American/Armenians?

We were treated very well. The SPIURK gave us a trip to remember. The people were extremely friendly, and very interested to know about us and the Armenians living in the United States. I'm not sure how Armenians in Yerevan really view us. But they did ask us to preserve our language. They want us all to speak

Being an American, did you experience any obstacles there?

The only real obstacle I experienced was not being able to speak and understand Armenian fluently.

How does the lifestyles of the people in Armenia differ from those here in the United States?

The United States and Armenia are two totally different worlds. In Armenia, they are not concerned if Joe down the street has more than they do. They work and enjoy life because no one is really more prestigious than the next person. I'm sure this is more due to the Soviet system that the people in general. Because of this, people can relax more. Everywhere you go in Yerevan, people are walking around, ladies walking down the street arm in arm, men playing tavloo, kids playing in the park or around the fountains. And, on every corner, there is an ice cream and coffee patio. They take life slowly, I guess that's the best way to describe it. They take the time to "smell the roses" which is something we're usually to busy to do.

Are the women in Armenia treated different than the women in the United

I think that depends on their role in the home. They weren't totally submissive to their husbands and families, they were treated equally. At least that's what I saw in the homes I visited. If women want to be professionals, they are not discourged.

Has the trip changed your perception of being an Armenian? Are you now more active in the Armenian community?

I have always taken great pride in being Armenian. The trip highlighted some of the reasons why I have so much pride in my culture and heritage. I'm just as active now in the Armenian community as I was

What advice would you give someone travelling to Armenia for the first time? Are there any special places they should

Don't expect Yerevan to be anything like the United States. If you do, you'll be disappointed when you get there. Enjoy yourself and adapt to their ways while you're there. Go anywhere you can, and keep a daily journal so you can remember dates, places, and people that you've seen

Would you travel to Armenia again? Definitely. Armenia was a wonderful experience. I encourage everyone to go.

Students interested in traveling to Armenia in June of 1989 can apply through:

The tour will be last 25 days and will be an educational trip of a lifetime.

The excursion will be led by Barlow Der Mugrdechian of the Armenian Studies Program.

My Brothers and Sisters

The following poem was written by Lory Bedikian of Cupertino, Ca. in honor of the struggle to reunite Karabagh to Armenia.

I see the children while they play and sing and are glorified in the sun's rays. I see the mothers as they hold on to dreams and the hands that need love. I see the men that have worked for the foundation of the family and for the well being of the church.

AND NOW... I see them all, I sit at their nameless graves as the tombstone, which should have marked date

but instead they remain dateless nameless nationless lifeless,

And I cry not for them but for us.

Leon S. Peters Business Building Dedicated-ASP Moves in New Offices

Hye Sharzhoom Staff

Perhaps the largest public building in the United States to be named after an Armenian, the Leon S. Peters Business Building, was officially dedicated at ceremonies at 11:00 am on Friday, October 14, 1988.

Dr. Harold Haak, President of California State University, Fresno welcomed faculty, staff, students, and community members to the dedication which also opened the privately funded Valley Business Center. President Haak's comments were followed by a presentation by Mr. Lewis Eaton, Chairman of Guarantee Savings and a long-time friend of the late Leon S. Peters. Dr. Jospeh Penbera, Dean of the School of Business and Administrative Sciences spoke on the impact of the Peters Business Building on the campus and community and David Sousa a student representative of the School of Business read the dedication plaque.

The Peters Business Building honors the memory of a remarkable man who served the Fresno community in many ways. He served on many major University Boards such as the University President's Advisory Board, the CSUF Foundation Board of Governors and the Bulldog Stadium Fund Drive to name a few. Thousands of students will use the building named after the Fresno benefactor.

The Peters Business Building is the home of the new offices of the Center for Armenian Studies and the Armenian Studies Program which are on the third floor, Room 384 of the east wing.

Armenian Studies Back in Humanities

On August 1 of this year the Armenian Studies Program was relocated into the Department of Foreign Languages in the School of Arts and Humanities. The change puts the Program along side the Russian, Spanish, German, French, Italian and Classics Programs. Elementary and Intermediate Armenian have always been taught as Foreign Language Department courses, now the whole Armenian Program and the minor, which it offers, is housed there.

When the new Armenian Studies Program was started in 1977, it was housed in the School of Humanities. The Chair of the search committee, which hired Dr. Dickran Kouymjian as Director of the Armenian Program, Dr. Joseph Satin was Dean of the School then and this semester expressed his delight at being able to welcome Armenian Studies back into his school.

In 1979 Armenian Studies had been transferred to the School of Social Sciences as part of the Ethnic Studies Program. But last spring, with the impending move of the Program into the new Center for Armenian Studies in the Leon S. Peters Building, the University administration and the deans of the respective schools in consultation with Professor Kouymjian and Ethnic Studies decided to transfer Armenian Studies back to its original home. Ethnic Studies moved its offices to the Social Sciences Building at the opposite end of the CSUF campus.

Professor Kouymjian and Lecturer in Armenian, Barlow Der Mugrdechian, expressed their satisfaction with the Program's new offices and the warm welcome they have had from Dr. Maurice Gendron, Chair of Foreign Languages, and the entire faculty of the Department. Several joint activities and programs have been held. Armenian Studies already feels totally at home in its new environment.

Universities we think of as being collections of departments and disciplines of great variety. Something which makes a university great is when that university begins to establish special programs, that pay special scholarly homage to particular areas of human endeavor. We are proud to count ourselves among the five universities in this entire nation that have Armenian Studies Programs, but more than that, we are incredibly proud of this program, for the fact, that as an Armenian Studies Program that is not merely a graduate program, as it is at most of the other institutions. Our program here is an an undergraduate program to begin with, and it is from an undergraduate program that you build. And we graduate more students in Armenian Studies than any other Armenian Studies Program in this country."

CSUF Vice President for Academic Affairs, Dr. Judith Kuipers said, "I have been here for about five years and when I came from Oregon State University to Fresno, and before that Tennessee, and Michigan before that. I had read William Saroyan, but did not honestly know much more about the Armenian culture. But two wonderful things happened to me. I met Agnes Hagopian and learned much from her. I also met Dr. Dickran Kouymjian and he was so full of intelligence and ideas and enthusiasm for this wonderful program called Armenian Studies...I am filled with so much admiration for the generation of your people who have contributed to this valley. As far as the academic affairs efforts on this campus, we will continue to support and value what the Armenian Studies Program does for our students in this university.

President Harold Haak who for many years has strongly supported the ASP commented, "...I would like to pick up on the theme of Leon S. Peters because he indeed was a wonderful person...and he left as a lasting imprint on Fresno the notion of a person giving back to the community of which he is a part... And this building is named after him because all of us recognize that he preeminently was the kind of business person who believed in the community around him and gave so generously to it...the kind of generosity which marks the difference between just being so so and being excellent throughout the university. And that is the kind of generosity we have with your support for our Armenian Studies Program, it truly does make a difference. I want to thank everyone in this room for your commitment to your university and your support for the Armenian Studies Program. It is deeply deeply appreciated."

Guests

Hye Sharzhoom Staff

Gayane Makhmurian of the History Institute of the Academy of Sciences in Yerevan, Armenia was a guest of the Armenian Studies Program November 20-21, 1988. Ms. Makhmurian had an opportunity to visit many of the Armenian sites in Fresno, with a special interest in those associated with the life of William Saroyan. On Monday, November 21 she met with Dr. Dickran Kouymjian, Director of the Armenian Studies Program and Barlow Der Mugrdechian, Lecturer in Armenian Studies and was given a tour of the new Center for Armenian Studies. Father Datev Tatoulian, parish priest of Sts. Sahag and Mesrob Church in Reedley assisted in hosting Ms. Makhmurian.

Saroyan's Ouest for Beauty

Dr. David Calonne speaking in the Alice Peters Auditorium

By Linda A. Abrahamian Editor

At 7:00 pm on November 22, in the Alice Peters Auditorium of the Valley Business Center the Armenian Students Organization, the Armenian Studies Program, and English Department at CSUF sponsored a lecture and slide presentation to commemorate the 80th anniversary of William Saroyan's birth.

William Saroyan passed away seven years ago in Fresno, CA; the town where he was born. Saroyan had a deep affection for Fresno, and the city was the setting for many of his literary works, including: My Name Is Aram and The Human Comedy. Since his death, fourteen books, both biographical and critical, have been published about the author/playwright.

Guest speaker, Dr. David Calonne, professor of English at Sienna Heights College, Michigan and at the University of Michigan, presented literary insight into Saroyan's aesthetic in a lecture titled "Saroyan's Quest for Beauty."

Dr. Calonne compared Saroyan to the 19th century poets and authors. Up until the 19th century, the definition of beauty was directly tied to God. Darwinism and Nietchze, however, destroyed God's given beauty in destroying the idea of God. Since "God is dead", great 19th century writers were tortured because they had to search for beauty in a world where there was none. Beauty, truth, faith, the meaning of life became something that was defined by the individual, and it could be found in either art or life. For Nietchze, "art is the highest achievement of men." It is the "highest" because art gives order to chaos: a world without God is a world without order. Beauty is thus order, and order can also be given to life.

The search for beauty, and the search for beauty in human beings were the driving forces in Saroyan's life. Saroyan's literature celebrated life itself, and it's beauty had to be found in day to day life. His characters were good, simple people who were somehow estranged or isolated. He found beauty in man's struggle to release himself from his isolation, his anguish, by reaching out to his fellow men. Saroyan's beauty was found in comradeship, brotherhood, and this was expressed in his art. He celebrated art through life by creating his ideal world in Saroyan's life too was celebrated in art. A photo-biography of Saroyan, produced by photographer Paul Kalinian, took an artistic approach to Saroyan's life. The film, which included a monologue in Saroyan's actual voice, consisted of still shots of Saroyan and his friends, as well as the Fresno he grew up in, and the Fresno he died in. Paul Kalinian is presently in the process of making a 60minute film on Saroyan.

A reception sponsored by the ASO followed the evening's activity, and guests were able to meet and ask questions of the main speakers.

The Armenian Students Organization held their annual elections in September and Jacqueline Sislian, a junior teaching major at CSUF, was elected President. Joining Jacqueline in the executive are: Shant Avakian, Vice-President; Gracie Vanoyan, Secretary; Phil Garo, Treasurer; and Matthew Jendian, Historian. Barlow Der Mugrdechian of the Armenian Studies Program is continuing as the advisor for the club.

Activities
The ASO has had several successful dinner meetings during the semester. A new booth was constructed by ASO members Yerevan Ohannessian and Robert Gosdanian and members congregate at the booth Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays from 10:00 to 12:00 noon. The booth has become the center for ASO members to meet and exchange ideas on campus. Information on upcoming social and educational events are posted on the booth.

Passport Fresno held the weekend of September 30-October 2 of this year was again a great success. This was the third year that the ASO has been selling shishkebab at the annual event held on the Downtown Mall. The weekend has been the main fund-raiser for the ASO over the past three years. Members cooked and served over 300 pounds of shish-kebab.

ASP/ASO Lecture Series
President Jacqueline Sislian and the executive have also been involved in the Lecture Series co-sponsored by the Armenian Studies Program and the Armenian Students Organization. A William Saroyan 80th anniversary commemoration kicked off the fall series and Dr. David Calonne of Siena Heights College in Michigan was the keynote speaker. Paul Kalinian also showed his photo-biography of Saroyan. The students provided the refreshments.

The second lecture in the series was by Barlow Der Mugrdechian of the Armenian Studies Program who spoke on the curent situation in Armenia and also showed slides of his trip to Armenia with CSUF students in June of this year.

Pledge Paid Off

The ASO also finished paying a pledge to the fund drive for the Leon S. Peters Business Building and Valley Business Center. The ASO pledged and paid in two years $1,500 and their name appears on the wall of honor in the Valley Business Center. Students worked at bake sales, Passport Fresno, and sold shish-kebab at the annual Spring Vintage Days weekend.

The 100,000 Armenians killed in the deadliest earthquake of this century can't be helped.

But

The hundreds of thousands of homeless refugees need your help desperately.

In addition to the sick, wounded and homeless victims of the earthquake, 100,000 refugees fleeing Turkish persecution in Azerbaijan have sought shelter and protection in Armenia in the past two weeks.

THESE HELPLESS ARMENIANS URGENTLY NEED YOUR AID.

Please send your donations of money, food or clothing to one of the following instituitons.
